

Where can I find out more about my clock and its maker?

The Clockmakers' Museum and Archive generally only hold manuscript material relating to its members, who, between the 17th and 19th centuries were primarily based in or near the City of London. This information may include the date of their apprenticeship (sometimes giving the name and address of the apprentice's father) and the date when apprentices became free (if applicable). If a freeman was promoted to the "livery" of the Company, that too was recorded. Unless a freeman went on to become a member of the Company's Court, or a Warden of the Company, or Master, it is rare for any further mention of him or her to be made. A list of the Company's apprentices from 1631 to 1931 was published privately for the Company by C.E. Atkins, a Past Master of the Company in 1931. This has now been digitised into a fully searchable pdf which can be found on the *Library and Archive* page of our website.

On occasion there may be no information for a London clockmaker as although in theory all London makers were obliged to become freemen of the Clockmakers' Company, many avoided doing so, because they did not wish to pay the associated fees.

The following link might also be helpful for genealogists seeking information about their ancestors *Family history at the London Metropolitan Archives*

Please visit the *Library and Archive* page of our website for details of our books, manuscripts and clockmaking records housed at the Guildhall Library.

The archival records of the Worshipful Company of Clockmakers contain almost no references to provincial English makers, and even fewer references to makers working outside England. There are a number of publications which may be of help for finding out more about these clockmakers. The best general work is G.H. Baillie's "Watchmakers and Clockmakers of the World" first published by Methuen, London in 1929, but subsequently republished many times by the N.A.G. Press, London. Baillie's volume has been substantially augmented (but not superseded) by B.A. Loomes's "Watchmakers and Clockmakers of the World Volume II" (N.A.G. Press 1976).

The following bibliography features a selection of other publications which list British clockmakers by city and region. Most publications should be available to order from a public lending library.
